Tips for Improved Connection on the Go

It's important to stay connected when you're traveling, but getting reliable internet access on the go isn't exactly easy. However, when you follow a few best practices, you can enjoy an improved connection from almost anywhere.

Security

With 84% of new RVers having one or more child in the RV, it's important to keep prying eyes off your network. You need a solid password that's hard for strangers to guess, but easy enough for your family to remember, especially your youngest family members! And if you're conducting private work and financial transactions over your network, you don't want your RV park neighbor gaining access. Secure Wi-Fi allows you to connect confidently and safely.

Safety

Your connection should be safe, and you shouldn't have to worry about outsiders coming in and disrupting that safety. The right Wi-Fi platform will help filter out the most prominent, unfavorable sites and categories, like pornography and social media. This typing of filtering protects your family, especially your children, from exposure to harmful content.

Coverage

Before you hit the road, you should look into whether or not you'll have coverage. Using a handy tool like this can help you determine which cellular provider will work best for your upcoming adventures! We also encourage you to review this handy report that compares all major US cellular providers. Keep in mind, our Trailblazer (T-Mobile) and Voyager (Verizon) plans will give you excellent coverage during your travels.

Some of our customers like to use more than one cellular provider to ensure they have maximum available coverage. Sure, it adds a little extra cost, but for many, a solid connection during every part of the adventure is worth it.

Need even more coverage? We've got you covered! (See what we did there?) Add a powerful cellular booster to your Wi-Fi set up and you're sure to get the best coverage possible.

And don't forget — due to the nature of cellular networks, we can't guarantee coverage in every signal nook and cranny of America, but we do our best. If you happen to find yourself in a spot without coverage even when using a booster, take that time to unplug from technology, enjoy your surroundings, and make some tech-free memories until your next stop.

Data

Data can be consumed fast, and this is especially true if you've got a bunch of teenage data-eaters on board with you!

With a lot of work and school shifting to video platforms like Zoom, it's important to try things like joining conference with a quick hello in front of the camera, let whoever is on the other end (staff, teacher, class, customers) know you're in a unique office/classroom that has limited data, and then switch off that camera. This will conserve a ton of data.

On the entertainment front, if you want to stream a bunch of movies, consider connecting an AppleTV to your main TV in the RV. Then, preload a family iPad with a ton of movies, mirror it to your AppleTV, and BAM! You can have family movie night right there in your RV. Many of our plans allow for flexibility in streaming services that won't take away from your allotted monthly data, like our BingeOn plans from T-Mobile. Tons of streaming services qualify, so you can enjoy entertainment your whole trip!

Extras

Don't forget about all the fun peripherals! It's important to think ahead here about what you might need because it's a lot easier to get these things and set them up before you take off than while you're on the road. Consider buying a Wi-Fi enabled printer so you can print homework and work documents as needed — all wirelessly. Another great thing to consider is a Wi-Fi enabled security camera so you can check on your RV or your pets when you and your family are off exploring!
